Warm-Up

Discussion:

- What do you think makes a good negotiator?
- What is more important: winning a conflict or finding a solution that helps everyone? Why?
- What is one helpful phrase or expression that you can apply in real-life business situations?

Practice

1. Vocabulary Review: Choose the right phrases

Discuss in pairs and choose appropriate negotiation or conflict resolution phrases for each scenario. Briefly explain why they fit best.

Note: You may choose each phrase multiple times, and each scenario may have more than one reasonable answer.

Example: “In the first scenario, I would say ‘I see your point, but...’ because it shows disagreement while also respecting the other opinion.”

Phrases	Scenarios
a) "I see your point, but..." b) "Let's meet halfway." c) "I'm afraid that won't work." d) "How about we...?" e) "That works for me." f) "I'm happy to go with your idea." g) "Let's look at the options."	1. A teammate insists on their idea, but you want to politely disagree and show you understand their view. 2. You want to suggest another idea for your project without sounding rude. 3. Your team can't agree, so you propose a solution where everyone gives a little. 4. Your manager suggests a deadline that you can't accept because of your workload. 5. Your coworker offers a suggestion that you completely agree with. 6. To break a deadlock, you want to encourage the group to think of several choices together. 7. You don't mind which decision is chosen, and you want to show your support.

2. Pronunciation Review: Polite Intonation & Stress in Negotiation

a. Polite Intonation for Disagreement & Compromise:

We often use a rising intonation or a softer voice at the end of a phrase to sound more polite, especially when disagreeing or suggesting compromise.

Practice in pairs with these phrases:

- I see your point, but...(↗) (soft tone)
- Maybe we can find a middle ground (↗)?
- How about we try it your way (↗) this time (softer)?
- I'm afraid that won't work. (Soften, especially on "I'm afraid")

b. Word Stress in Negotiating & Resolving Conflict:

Placing stress on key words helps your message sound clear, confident and professional. Stress the most important words.

Practice in pairs with these phrases:

- "Let's meet halfway."
- "I'm willing to adjust."

- “Let’s work together to find a solution.”
- “That works for me.”
- “I don’t mind adjusting for you.”

c. Practice:

In pairs, choose a negotiation/conflict situation. Express your opinion using at least one phrase from above, with correct intonation and stress. Give your partner feedback at the end of the activity.

1. You want the meeting at 10am; your partner wants noon.
2. You want to continue a project; your partner wants to stop.
3. You want to lead a team; your partner also wants to.

CASE STUDY: WHICH APPROACH WORKS BEST?

Work in pairs or small groups:

- Read the scenarios and each character’s approach.
- Define which tactic/ strategy each character is using.
- Discuss which approach is more effective in that situation.
- Support your answer with reasons (think about time, relationships, results, and fairness).

Scenario 1: Price Negotiation

Which approach is more effective for negotiating a good deal and building a long-term business relationship?

Context:

You are a sales representative at a technology company. You are negotiating a contract with GreenTech, a medium-sized new customer. GreenTech wants a significant discount because they are just starting out and have a limited budget. Your company rarely gives big discounts, but building a relationship could be important for future business.

A's Approach	B's Approach
"Our standard price is €1,200 per month. Our clients find it's great value for all the support and updates included. If you're thinking about a longer contract or future projects, I'd be happy to talk about special conditions."	"I understand budgets are tight for new businesses. What parts of our service are most important for you right now? Maybe we can look at some flexible options to help you start."

Scenario 2: Event Promotion Conflict

Which approach is better for solving the conflict and ensuring a successful event?

Context:

You and a teammate are organizing a major industry event for your company. Your boss wants the event publicized quickly. There's big pressure because last year's event had low attendance.

You and your teammate have each prepared different marketing plans. The deadline to choose a plan is tomorrow.

A's Approach	B's Approach
"We're short on time, so I'm okay to follow your plan this time. But if we don't see good results, can we try my plan next year?"	"I know time is short, but maybe we can each pick the one thing from our plan we like most and use both in the campaign. That way, we both contribute and maybe get better results"

Discussion:

1. Which approach (A or B) do you think would work better in your company or culture? Why?
2. Were there any risks or possible problems with the strategies used by A or B? What could go wrong?
3. How can you decide which negotiation or conflict resolution strategy to use in real life?
