 Case Study

David, a marketing manager at XYZ Inc., was tasked with presenting a new product launch to a group of potential clients and partners. He decided to hold a virtual presentation using Zoom, but things didn't go as planned. David's internet connection was slow, causing the presentation to lag and freeze several times. Additionally, his background was noisy, with family members interrupting him during the presentation. David had also not tested the demo beforehand, and it didn't work as expected during the presentation. As a result, the audience became frustrated and disengaged, and the presentation failed to achieve its intended purpose.

Case Study Analysis

Answer the following questions:

1. What were some of the key factors that contributed to the failure of David's virtual presentation?
2. How could David have better prepared for the presentation to avoid these issues?
3. What steps could David have taken to troubleshoot the technical issues during the presentation?
4. How can presenters balance the need for a professional environment with the challenges of presenting from home?
5. What strategies can presenters use to recover from technical issues and re-engage their audience during a virtual presentation?
